Preventing Infection There are two main aspects to controlling wound infection: preventing microorganisms from entering the wound, and preventing the transmission of bloodborne pathogens to or from the client to others. See Table 34–3, and see Chapter 29 for more information about infection control.